Plenary of Board of Deputies held 17th June

From Michael Reik – Board Deputy for Mosaic Reform

I asked Amanda Bowman – Vice President, Defence Division – how we, and the Jewish Community in general, were going to deal with the Labour Party's refusal to accept the Internationally-accepted definition of antisemitism. The current LP definition includes positions with regard to Israel which are offensive to the Jewish Community.

Dame Louise Ellman made it clear that the Jewish Labour Movement will fight the Labour Party on the appointment of their new Legal Advisor and the antisemitism definition.

No date has been set for the next meeting of the Board with Jeremy Corbyn.

There was discussion about the Kaddish in Parliament Square and the letter from Yachad. Both were seen by the chairman as an entitled view by an unrepresentative minority.

Concern was expressed at reports on Sky and the BBC of the deplorable casualties in Gaza without any reference to concerns about Israeli casualties.

Split Synagogue

by Steve Levinson

There are about 100 members, but all of them from mixed marriages.

It is not a large place, but very warm and intimate and the ark at one end, facing Jerusalem, is built into the Western Wall of Diocletian's palace – the wall that dates from 305AD.

The synagogue has been in this location since about 1500, when Sephardi refugees from Spain and Portugal fled here. Its current appearance dates from 1728. But the Jews of Split go back much further and were known as Romaniotes. Their symbols and artefacts, such as carved menorahs and shofars, have been discovered deep inside the Roman palace and date from the 3rd and 4th century AD. These discoveries, found in chambers destroyed by fire in 1507, are believed to indicate there was a synagogue inside the palace for a thousand years before the current one was built. There is no space here to go into the incredible story of the Jews of Split, but if you visit the town and nearby Dubrovnik, make sure to take time to search out the ancient synagogues in the alleys.

Praying at the Western Wall is something of which all Jews are aware. The automatic assumption is that the Wall in question is in Jerusalem and is the remains of a construction from Roman times.

But this is not the only ancient Western Wall Jews pray at. There is another place of Jewish worship at a Roman Wall built in 305 AD by the Emperor Diocletian in what is now the Croatian city of Split.

On a recent trip to Croatia my wife Viv and I discovered Split's beautiful synagogue tucked away up an alley in what was the Ghetto. A sheet of A4 paper pinned to a door up another set of steps said "Synagogue". We tried an anonymous doorbell, and the non-descript door immediately opened. A local man, who turned out to be the warden, ushered us inside where we discovered a stunning, and lovingly restored old synagogue.

There were elaborate murals and ceiling decorations, a highly polished dark wood bimah and pew, intricate lanterns and sculpted stairs to the women's gallery. This synagogue claims to be the oldest Sephardi synagogue in continuous use in Europe.

Visit by Mohamed Fahili

Right: Rabbi Kathleen with Mohammed Fahili, Director of the Sir Charles Clore Jewish-Arab Community Centre in Akko – one of the recipients of MR's High Holyday Appeal. The Centre services deprived families in Akko; offering first class education, subsidised music and dance tuition, summer camps and educational support. It was a privilege to have Mohamed with us on 9th June and to hear his optimistic and pragmatic message of hope.

Gottfried Fuchs (1889-1972)

One of two Jewish players in the pre-war German national team

by David Wyman

By the time you read this article England's attempt to win the World Cup may well have ended in tears. If indeed this is the case, then they could well have done with a player of the calibre of my late mother's (née Fuchs) first cousin – Gottfried. He was a club player for Karlsruher FV.

In 1910 at the age of 21 his team won the German championship. A year later he was selected to play for the German national team. He was one of two Jewish players. The other was Julius Hirsch, a KFV teammate.

1912 saw Gottfried playing in the Stockholm Summer Olympics in one of the most remarkable games of football history. The German national team won the game 16:0 against the Russians, Gottfried scoring 10 goals! Czar Nicholas was so angry that the Russian players had to pay their own way home. Altogether Gottfried played in 6 international matches, scoring a total of fourteen goals.

During World War I, Gottfried served as an artillery officer and suffered several wounds. After the war, and despite his injuries, he played again for KFV, retiring in 1920.

In 1937, his family decided to leave Nazi

Gottfried with Pelé

Germany – they found refuge in France. Gottfried Fuchs' forefathers originated from Alsace but were still required to become German citizens following the Franco-Prussian War in 1870/71. Thus, in France in 1939, he was labelled an "enemy foreigner" and detained.

As German troops marched into Belgium, Fuchs and his family managed to escape to the UK and eventually Canada, where he changed his name to Godfrey E. Fochs. Julius Hirsch was not as fortunate as he was murdered in Auschwitz.

In July 1971, before a FC Santos match in Montreal, Gottfried Fuchs greeted world famous football star Pelé. To commemorate his ten-goal game in 1912, Fuchs was given the honour of kicking-off the match.

A 1939 edition of The Kicker Almanac – a popular German football magazine – contained records of all the national players from 1908, but unsurprisingly failed to include both Julius Hirsch and Gottfried Fuchs!

Three years ago, I met Gottfried's granddaughter who showed me his scrapbook full of newspaper cuttings of his football exploits. She has since donated it to the Jewish Museum in Berlin.

Heed the warning signs!

by Alan Solomon

So there I was in Israel in March – aged 78, fit and healthy (or so I thought), seeing our youngest son and his family, taking the grandchildren out, being taken for a walk by their rather large dog, and walking around Masada (although taking the lift up and down). I’ve always been very active, playing various sports in my younger days, working out at the gym, and walking – including being a member of the Mosaic Walking Group, all without any problems.

On 10th April, three weeks after our return, we were moving, leaving our house in Pinner where we’d lived for 46 years (!) and downsizing to a nearby chalet bungalow. It was then that I began to feel a slight discomfort (not pain) in my chest. I had the common sense to fix an appointment with the GP, who arranged for me to go to the Chest Pain Clinic at St. Mary’s Hospital, Paddington on 27th April. After various tests there, I was told I needed an angiogram, which would be at Hammersmith Hospital on 23rd May, preceded by an echocardiogram at St Mary’s the day before. The letter about the angiogram said I shouldn’t go home by public transport, so we took the car and Janet would drive me home afterwards.

Imagine my shock when I was told after the angiogram that my arteries were severely blocked – up to 75 per cent – and that I needed a triple heart bypass. And no, I wouldn’t be going home that day, but needed to stay in so that they could keep an eye on me until the operation. Not exactly what I was expecting! After all, I was fit and active. These things happen to other people!

After 13 days of wearing a portable heart monitor, having my blood pressure and temperature checked every four hours day and night, and regular ECGs and blood tests, I had my bypass on 5th June. This ended up as a quadruple, and I was also told I had a collapsed lung (I gather not uncommon). But this was fixed as well, and I was able to come home on 10th June. I am now (mid-June) taking it easy in our new home, and fully realise that it’ll be at least three months before I’m back to normal.

The care and treatment I received during my stay at Hammersmith was first-class, and I have nothing but praise for the NHS when, as in my case, there is something seriously wrong.

Why have I bothered to write this account of a personal medical problem? It is a plea to anyone reading this to do what I did: on first thinking that something was not right, even though there may be no actual pain, to see your doctor. I was told my problem was probably caused by family history, so my own apparent fitness was of no consequence. I am just thankful that I had the common sense to take action when I did – otherwise the consequences do not bear thinking about...

Many thanks to all our friends at Mosaic for their kind wishes over the last few weeks.

Brainteaser
Compiled by John Ashmele

If 355 equates to 524 and 1235 equates to 2521, then what does 850 equate to?

Answer to June Brainteaser
The wise old Bedouin adds his camel to the 17, bringing the total to 18. The camels are then divided as follows: one-half of 18 equals 9 camels for the first son, one-third of 18 equals 6 camels for the second son, one-ninth of 18 equals two camels for the third son. After each son takes his camels, the wise old Bedouin’s camel remains, so he remounts it and rides off.
